Arthur Dick was a tireless advocate for freedom, peace, and unity. He was born in 1917 in Mississippi, and he grew up in a segregated society. He witnessed the horrors of racism firsthand, and he was determined to make a difference in the world.

Dick began his career as a teacher, but he soon became involved in the civil rights movement. He joined the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), and he helped to organize sit-ins, protests, and voter registration drives.

In 1964, Dick was arrested and beaten by police while participating in a protest. He was later convicted of trespassing and sentenced to 30 days in jail. Undeterred, he continued to fight for justice.

After his release from jail, Dick founded the Freedom School in Mississippi. The school provided education and leadership training to young people who were involved in the civil rights movement. Dick also helped to establish the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, which challenged the all-white delegation from Mississippi at the 1964 Democratic National Convention.

Dick's work for freedom and equality continued throughout his life. He served as a member of the Mississippi House of Representatives, and he was a founding member of the United States Peace Council. He also worked to promote peace and reconciliation in Northern Ireland and South Africa.

Dick died in 2008, but his legacy continues to inspire people around the world. He was a true champion of freedom, peace, and unity. He fought for what he believed in, and he made a difference in the world.

Dick's Principles

Dick's work was guided by a set of principles that he called the "Three Freedoms":

- Freedom from oppression: This freedom includes the right to be free from slavery, colonialism, and other forms of oppression.
- Freedom from want: This freedom includes the right to food, water, shelter, and other basic necessities.
- Freedom from fear: This freedom includes the right to live in a world without war, violence, or persecution.

Dick believed that these three freedoms were essential for human dignity. He worked to achieve these freedoms for all people, regardless of their race, religion, or nationality.

Dick's Legacy

Dick's legacy is one of hope and inspiration. He showed that one person can make a difference in the world. He also showed that it is possible to achieve freedom, peace, and unity, even in the face of adversity.

Dick's work continues to inspire people around the world. His principles are a guide for activists and peacebuilders who are working to create a more just and equitable world.
